IMPREGNABLE FORT TO HOLD U. S. GOLD

Vault Will Be Built of Steel and Concrete.

Washington.—The government awarded the contract for construction of its new depository fortress at Fort Knox, Ky., to the Great Lakes Construction company of Chicago. The gold fort will cost $468,274.

The vault is to be built on specifications prepared by the Treasury department. These were designed to make the storehouse as impregnable as the skill of man could devise.

The vault also will be suspended in the middle of a square building with floors, roofs, and walls two feet thick. The walls and roofs are to be faced with granite

Use Steel and Concrete.

The vault also will be two feet thick of unusual construction. Steel coils are to be laced into one another within the walls with steel rods running through the coils to hold them together. The coils will be imbedded in concrete.

Thus, according to the designers, even though much of the concrete is removed, the steel coils will remain as a barrier against the passage of even a man's hand.

The vault will be 40 by 64 feet and extend through nearly two stories of the completed building. The space allowing for corridors would be sufficient to house $10,000,000,000 in gold.

Site Far From Coast.

Under present plans the vault will hold all the gold of the country now in the East. There are at present $9,500,000,000 in gold in the country, the bulk of which is in the East. Fort Knox was selected as the site of the storehouse because it is behind the natural barriers of the Rockies and the Appalachians—2,100 miles from the Pacific coast and 650 miles from the Atlantic coast.

Duluth, Minn.—George A. Sloan of Duluth has sold two ancient automobiles to a Los Angeles museum being developed by a California lumberman. One car was a five-passenger International, the other a sporty one-seater made by an Ohio firm. They had been in storage for 15 or 20 years, Sloan said.

Cat, Rooster Pals

Wilson, N. C.—A cat and a large red rooster have become inseparable buddies on the farm of Lurlan Barnes. During the day they roam the farm side by side. At night the rooster stays on the ground to be beside his pal.

Charles Rosser, of Pamplin, Dies In Hospital; Hit by Train Here Today

Dies 2 Hours After Being Struck By Freight Train As Walked By Gates

Charles Rosser, of Pamplin, died in the Virginia Baptist Hospital in Lynchburg at 1:30 this afternoon, from mortal injuries received at 11:15 this morning, when he was hit by a shifting freight train here at the town's principal crossing.

According to eye witnesses, the crossing guard gates were down, as a local freight shifted cars. Mr. Rosser had his overcoat pulled up around to ward off the wind of the coldest morning of the winter. The temperature was freezing. Therefore, he did not see the on coming train until too late.

The practice of crossing railroad tracks while the gates are down is frequently indulged in by local people on foot, although to do so invites grim tragedy.

Too late, he threw up his arms, according to witnesses as if to ward off the impact. He was tossed to the rails. His wounds included ghastly head gashes and a crushed leg.

He was rushed to the hospital and died within two hours after wards.

This is the first death by accident in Appomattox county this year.

Funeral plans were unknown at press time.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Rosser Baldwin; Mrs. Estelle Bateman; Six children: Calvin, Miss Ruth and John Rosser and Mrs. Ben Covington; and the following sister and brothers: Morton, Walter, Henry Frank and Lloyd Rosser, Mrs. James Glenn, Mrs. Carl Rogers and Mrs. Martha Anderson.

He was 55 years of age.

HALT MEASLES WITH OLD HEATHEN CURE

Placental Extract Is Being Used With Success.

Milwaukee, Wis.—An old heathen custom, revived with scientific improvements at Boston, was credited by speakers before the American Public Health association with preventing measles in a surprisingly large number of cases.

Physicians from that city explained for the first time to the medical profession a modern technique involving use of placental extract.

Some aborigines, after a child was born, saved and dried the placenta. In after years whenever the child ailed, it was fed him as "good medicine."

Given by Spoonful.

At Boston a purified placental extract is given by the spoonful for measles.

Dr. Elliot S. Robinson, M. D., of the Massachusetts department of public health, and Charles F. McKhann, of Harvard medical school, reported in a paper on use of the extract both by intramuscular injection and by mouth.

The hypodermic method is the newest thing in measles treatment, stopping, according to their paper, about 60 per cent of cases during incipiency, and removing danger of death frequently even in later stages.

"We have also tried," said Doctor Robinson, "giving this extract by mouth. The results show that an old heathen custom was not so ridiculous as might be supposed.

"Under this custom the placental extract was dried. If a child became ill he might be given some of his own placenta. Sometimes the custom was modified to pool the placenta and use them for all children.

Thirty-Three Children Tested.

"We gave the extract by mouth to 33 children in the incubation measles stage. In two-thirds of them the measles was either prevented or modified.

"This result is based on too few cases, but it indicates that the failures from the method might be about 25 per cent. This is not nearly as good as the intramuscular injection, which shows failures in only 4.5 per cent.

"Furthermore, larger quantities are needed than by injection. It might not be easy to obtain sufficient extract for extensive use."

Health officers who heard this report suggested that Doctor Robinson continue the spoon experiments because of occasional disadvantages of giving hypodermics to small children.

Australia "Movie Mad"

Melbourne, Victoria.—Australia, in proportion to its population, has more cinemas than any other country. There are 1,286 for 6,630,000 people, or one for 5,287 persons. The United States has one for every 10,600, and the United Kingdom one for every 9,333.

S. K. Cassell, of V. P. I., addressed the annual meeting of the Agricultural Advisory Board of Appomattox county at the Court House here Tuesday. About fifty were present, including a number of local business men. A. R. Harwood, as president of the board presided.

Mr. Cassell prefaced his address with an outline of the benefits the farmers and the public had derived from the A. A. A.

He declared the A. A. A. had been "the salvation of the tobacco farmer" and cited figures from this and last year's sales. He further declared that the return of the farmers' purchasing power was restoring the nation once again to prosperity.

He predicted that the new farm program to replace the A. A. A., would be based on "land use" and recommended community meetings of farmers to offer suggestions.

To Have Health Meeting Here

On February 4, there will be a joint meeting of the Appomattox County Chapter of Red Cross, the County Board of Health, the county Tuberculosis Association, at the Court House at 7:30 P. M.

Miss Sarah Lee Coleman, who has been sent to this county by the State Board of Health to make a tuberculosis survey, will be present.

Misses Evelyn and Erna Dickerson were honored by being put on the Dean's List at S. T. C., at Farmville.

Employment Policy Here Is Changed

It was announced this week that hereafter work on the resettlement project here may be secured by registering at the national reemployment office in Lynchburg.
